Welcome to MEDSI School 2026

The MEDSI School 2026, hosted by the Synchrotron Light Research Institute (SLRI), is an intensive international training programme dedicated to the fundamental and advanced aspects of mechanical engineering in synchrotron radiation facilities.

Engineering for modern light sources requires a unique blend of precision, stability, and high-performance vacuum technology. This school provides a deep dive into the specialised mechanical systems that enable world-class X-ray science — covering the entire facility lifecycle from conceptual design to final experimental integration.

The school brings together early-career specialists and world-renowned experts from the major light-source facilities across the globe, forging an engineering community that lasts long after the sessions end. We warmly invite industry partners to join us and connect directly with this audience.

An international faculty

Experts drawn from more than twenty of the world's leading synchrotron facilities lead the curriculum.

The engineers of tomorrow

Young engineers, early-career specialists, and PhD students building their expertise in X-ray science.

Display Specifications

Each assigned engagement position sits within the primary instructional hall and includes a standard structural setup supplied by the host institution (SLRI).

- Assigned table — 75 cm (W) × 183 cm (L) × 75 cm (H), with a formal fitted table drape included.
- Seating — 1–2 chairs dressed with white formal fabric covers.
- Electrical provision — one single-phase power outlet (2,300 W, 10 A) at no extra charge.
- Extended display footprint — up to a 3 × 3 m allocation around the table for roll-up banners, X-frame stands, and compact technical samples.

Power — operational constraint: the outlet is strictly for general electronic devices (laptops, tablets, lighting, low-power desktop displays). High-power machinery, pumps, and heavy thermal equipment may not be powered on-site inside the instructional hall.

Display guidelines. All X-stands, literature racks, and desktop equipment must be safely contained within the allocated footprint and positioned to avoid obstructing sightlines, emergency walkways, or neighbouring positions.
